*A thriller that takes you inside
the moral dilemma
of remote-controlled warfare.*

Eye in the Sky is an intense thriller that captures the ethical dilemma at the heart of drone warfare. The scene is set in a command center, where pilots guide war drones by remote control, attacking terrorists thousands of miles away.

On this day, a long-sought terrorist is in the crosshairs on the computer screen when a young girl wanders into the kill zone. An international dispute develops over what to do next.

The nail-biting events that follow pit mercy against military action. Helen Mirren and Alan Rickman are excellent as British military officers trying to eliminate terrorists. Aaron Paul is the U.S. drone pilot assigned to carry out the killing mission.

The film is a disturbing peek behind the curtain that separates the public from the reality of today's warfare. You, the viewer, are left wondering what you would do if you were there—and how you would live with it for the rest of your life.

2015. Drama, mystery, suspense. 103 min. Directed by Gavin Hood. Written by Guy Hibbert. Rated R for violence, language, and emotional intensity.
